

FCC --

Please add me to the growing list of Americans completely opposed to any more media mergers, particularly as it pertains to expanding the number and type of media a company can own in one metropolitan area.

In fact, far too much media consolidation has already occurred, severely limiting the number of voices and perspectives available in communities throughout the United States.

Information, it is said, is power. The continued consolidation of the major media naturally reduces the breadth of information, thereby removing power from its consumers, the American voters. We can only strengthen our nation by expanding, not restricting, the free exchange of ideas.
